OFFER AS WRITTEN

$339,420

$450,000 cash, one agent, no closing costs

RECOMMENDED COUNTER

$377,820

$490,000 cash, one agent, no closing costs

SAVED BY ONE AGENT + NO CLOSING COSTS

$26,950

At $490,000 versus a typical financed buyer with their own agent

DAYS TO CLOSE

15

Cash. No lender, no appraisal gap, no underwriting

What this offer does for you

- No second agent to pay. The buyer came to me directly, so total commission is 4% instead of the usual 6%. At $490,000 that keeps $14,700 in your pocket.
- No closing cost help. Most financed buyers ask the seller to cover 2% to 3% of the price in closing costs. He asked for none. At $490,000 that is another $12,250 you keep.
- Cash. No loan to be approved, no appraisal that can come in low and reopen the price, no 30 to 45 day wait. He can close October 16.
- As-is sale with a 10-day inspection window. You are not on the hook for repairs. If he finds something, he can ask, but you are not obligated.
- Appliances convey. Refrigerator, washer and dryer stay. Everything else is the normal fixtures.

The one hurdle: he wants in before closing

The buyer has asked to move in before the Act of Sale. That is the piece of this deal that carries real risk for you, and here is why.

- If the sale falls through after he moves in, you have a tenant, not a buyer. Getting him out means a Louisiana eviction, which takes weeks and costs money.
- Anything that breaks after move-in becomes a fight over who pays. Your homeowner's policy may not cover damage caused by someone who is not a tenant on a lease.
- He has no deposit on the table. Letting someone occupy a $490,000 house with nothing at risk is not a position you want to be in.

My recommendation: close earlier instead of letting him in earlier. A cash sale can close in 7 to 10 days once the title work is done. If he needs to be in the house, the cleanest answer is to move the Act of Sale up, not to hand over keys before the money is in your account.

A financed buyer with their own agent would need to offer about $521,000 to put the same money in your pocket as the $490,000 cash counter. Estimates only. Final figures come from the closing attorney's settlement statement.

Recommended counter

1. Price: $490,000. List is $510,000. The buyer came in at 88% of list. $490,000 is 96% of list and leaves him room to feel he won something.
2. Deposit: $2,500 delivered within 72 hours of acceptance, held by Keller Williams Realty-First Choice. The offer currently has no deposit.
3. Proof of funds within 3 days of acceptance: bank letter or statement showing at least $490,000 available. You may terminate if it is not delivered.
4. Remove the appraisal contingency. This is a cash sale. If he wants an appraisal, it is at his cost and cannot reopen the price.
5. No early occupancy. Offer to move the Act of Sale up if he needs to be in sooner.
6. Keep everything else: as-is sale, 10-day inspection period, Act of Sale October 16, 2026, appliances convey, mineral rights convey.

If he pushes back

- On price: a $480,000 fallback still nets about $368,220, which is $28,800 better than the offer as written.
- On the deposit: $2,500 is modest for a $490,000 cash purchase. If he balks at that, it tells you something about how committed he is.
- On early move-in: hold the line. Offer an earlier closing date instead. If he truly has the cash, closing in 10 days solves his problem and protects you.

If he still insists on early occupancy, it only happens on these terms: inspection period finished and property accepted in writing, proof of funds verified, a signed Pre-Closing Occupancy Agreement, a non-refundable occupancy fee, deposit increased and non-refundable at move-in, buyer carries renter's insurance, and buyer accepts the property as-is on the day he moves in.

Seller acknowledgment

I have reviewed this estimated net sheet and offer summary. I understand these figures are estimates prepared by my agent and that actual costs, payoff amounts and prorations will be determined at closing.
